IT'S ALL ABOUT THE FLAVOUR

Australian lamb is raised on natural pastures and as a result needs very little done to it in the cooking process. It has incredible flavour already, particularly the lamb shoulder. Simply season and slow roast this cut to produce sweet, juicy meat that is full of flavour. Australian lamb can also be complemented by many spices and aromatics. Seasoned with herbs, stuffed with fruit and nuts, roasted, braised or thin sliced for grilling, Australian lamb shoulder is an extremely versatile cut that allows for so many menu options.

Square Cut Shoulder

The square cut shoulder is prepared from a forequarter by removing the neck by a straight cut between the third and fourth cervical vertebrae. The breast and foreshank are removed by a cut commencing at the junction of the first rib and first sternal segment continuing to the specified rib running parallel to the backbone.

Lamb Shoulder Rack Frenched

A lamb shoulder rack frenched is produced from the square cut shoulder. This cut provides an economical alternative to a traditional eight-point lamb rack from the loin. Removing the cap muscle leaves a leaner piece of meat, which suits grilling methods. Alternatively, add a mustard and herb crust to retain moisture when roasting.

Hot Tip

The national dish of Jordan is Mansaf: lamb on the bone seasoned with herbs and spices, cooked in yoghurt and served with rice and nuts. Mansaf translates as "explosion" – the perfect descriptor for the flavour burst it brings to the mouth. Australian lamb shoulder is perfect braised and slow cooked in plenty of moisture, with its layers of connective tissue that melt in the cooking process adding flavour and texture to the dish.

Dear fellow chefs, ladies and gentlemen,

Welcome to the October issue of our Gulf Gourmet.

September for us began with a huge loss. Chef Mike Wunsch left us far too early. His remains were taken to Germany and laid on his final resting place in his hometown. Our thoughts are with his wife and son.

In the second half of September, we had a very successful Chef's Table event at the Hotel show. Congratulations to all 11 teams for a fantastic job done. The top four teams were separated by a mere two points.

This month, our Young Chef National Team will travel to Cairo for the African Cup, which will be held during HACE, hosted by the Egyptian Chefs. We wish Chef Mario and the team the very best.

Both the Senior and Junior Teams are training in full swing for the Culinary Olympics in Stuttgart in February 2020.

Meanwhile the registration is open for the Cuisine Du Sial from 9th – 11th December at ADNEC Abu Dhabi.

World of Food Abu Dhabi has been confirmed for 5th – 9th of December in the Mother of Native Park in Abu Dhabi. We really look forward to this event with many visiting Celebrity Chefs and lots of fun for the family. The highlight will be on the 7th when we are going to attempt to break a Guinness World Record.

Please visit gulfgourmet.net to browse through previous issue of this magazine. Visit emiratesculinaryguild. net to see latest happenings on the events calendar. And visit www. facebook.com/wacsyoungchefs for young chefs to be in contact with over 4,000 chefs across the globe.

Please do not miss the company profile of our corporate members. We really do appreciate your support. Also do look at the Friends of the Guild pages to check all our supporters.

Thank you to Chef Eby Joseph and the Dubai Marine Beach Resort & Spa for hosting the September meeting.

Culinary Regards,

Uwe Micheel President, Emirates Culinary Guild Director of Kitchens, Radisson Blu Hotel Dubai Deira Creek Assistant Vice President, WorldChefs

he impact that quality of ingredients can have on a dish is simply astounding. This is an open secret that every chef and his customer knows. Therefore, I can only imagine how much of a struggle it must be for you when negotiating with management on costing and trying to put forth the case for spending on high quality ingredients.

It is not easy to explain how shortterm gains can impact long-term growth and repeat footfall. Especially in a market where operational costs are on the rise and the propensity to eat out is growing less. Or perhaps it feels that way given the neverending rise in competition within the restaurant scene in the Arabian Gulf.

Personally, I am beginning to see consumer behaviour change in favour of high-quality ingredients. Even within restaurants that are economical. People today literally discuss a lot more than just plating and taste. The real discussion these days in the living room - when recommending a restaurant – is how a person feels hours after leaving the restaurant. If you don't feel too thirsty or bloated after 7-8 hours, you will see people returning for more.

The real challenge lies in getting to that point within a price range that does not put off the customer.

Talking of ingredients, here's an anecdote I'd like to share. My parents, who recently became septuagenarians, spent their retirement days building a new home in our village. I guess it has something to do with going back to their roots.

Last week, I visited them to see the house that they've built, and as is customary looked forward to eating my mom's food. My first reaction was to ask my mom if she had changed her recipe, because the dishes had so much more flavour to it.

He answer was no.

Just the fact that we were using ingredients that were farm fresh growing in our backyard changed the dynamics of simple dishes. The oil, the milk, the vegetables, it all came together like a symphony of flavours, elevating what for me was already very good dishes.

My point is that, as chefs, it is your responsibility to encourage high quality ingredients in your dishes even if it means having to stand your ground. With growing competition, there is no way your restaurant will succeed by offering customers dishes made with poor quality ingredients camouflaged with butter and salt. And there is no way you can expect high quality ingredients at a low price. There will always be a catch.

Make sure you do the right thing.

This issue has a lot of stories and images from events around the country and various parts of the world.

Until next time, enjoy the read and keep cooking with passion.

Mauro Colagreco, the World's Best Restaurant chef, coming to Dubai

ne&Only Royal Mirage in Dubai is collaborating with renowned French culinary talent Chef Mauro Colagreco. Mauro is Chef Patron of the three Michelin starred restaurant, Mirazur, on the French Riviera, which was voted number one in the world at The World's 50 Best Restaurant Awards this year. It is the first time that France has received the number one position since The World's 50 Best began in 2002.

He says the win "recognises the trajectory of my life from Argentina to the French Riviera that welcomed me so warmly 19 years ago"

The partnership with One&Only Royal Mirage will see Chef Mauro overseeing the resort's fine dining restaurant Celebrities, The Beach Bar & Grill overlooking Palm Island bay and Esplanade at the Grand Pool of The Palace from November 2019. He will introduce inspired new concepts and menus incorporating influences from his diverse heritage and rich experience for guests to enjoy.

With so many celebrity chefs vying to make their mark in Dubai with mixed results, we can only wait and watch how this collaboration works. Wishing the team the very best.

Chef Leonardo is F&B Director at Four Seasons Riyadh

our Seasons Hotel Riyadh at Kingdom Centre has appointed Leonardo Concezzi as Director of Food & Beverage. The Italian-born culinary master will lead and oversee all daily operations and management of the Hotel's three distinct restaurants together with its sizeable banquet operations.

With a career spanning three decades and numerous countries, Concezzi brings extensive experience in the luxury dining sector to the table. His international journey began at the age of 19 when he left his home country for a job as a chef in Miami, United States. Concezzi's natural talent and dedication to his craft soon opened doors to many exciting opportunities, which led to him entering the luxury hotel industry in the year 2000.

Since then, he has further honed his knowledge and skills at renowned 5-star properties in Australia, the Bahamas, Italy, Morocco, Syria, Thailand, Turkey, and the UAE, with his time in the Middle East providing a valuable opportunity to become familiar with local favours and culture.

Andaz Dubai the Palm has new Executive Chef

Andaz Dubai The Palm has announced Laurent Philippe Pommey as its Executive Chef.

From freshly harvested oysters from Dibba Bay in Northern Fujairah, the first farm in the Middle East sourcing gourmet oysters for the region, to a partnership with an olive oil farm in Jordan, home to some of the oldest olive trees in the world, Chef Laurent is excited to put his vision of 'farm to table' on display at the property and showcase the hidden gems of the region.

The French/Australian has worked in five-star hotels and Michelin Star restaurants from France to Australia with a stint in the Middle East as well.

He says, "I've been part of the Hyatt family for a number of years, and I can't wait to introduce the region to our innovative F&B concepts and showcase the fantastic produce that the Middle East has to offer."

Dubai-based chef Grégoire Berger ranked among world's best t the world's best chefs awards ceremony in Barcelona, Spain last month, Bjorn Frantzen, of Restaurant Frantzen in Stockholm, Sweden, won top honours followed by Spain's Joan Roca and David Munoz.

Not surprisingly in the top 50 was Dubaibased chef Grégoire Berger for his work at the Ossiano seafood themed restaurant located within Atlantis The Palm.

The Best Chef Award is one of the biggest chef competitions globally, aiming to champion the top 300 chefs in the world, celebrating their talent, individuality and culinary flair.

Berger also won the "FoI-LOVERS" award, which is driven by the highest number of votes by the public and media.

"I am so honored to have won the 'Fol-LOVERS' award for the second year running and to have been recognised by the public, media and my peers as a deserved winner of this prestigious accolade," Berger said in a released statement. "To be considered as one of the top 50 chefs in the world and to be amongst so many talented professionals, whom I deeply admire, is a dream come true," he added.

Robots cook at Future Café during Gitex

f you though your biggest competition as a chef is your colleague or a chef in a nearby hotel, think again. At Gitex, the Telecommunications Regulatory Authority (TRA) in the UAE presented its future projects based on AI, 5G and IoT, while a robot named 'Smart Robotic Chef prepared a number of dishes professionally and with high accuracy at its Future Café for visitors. This robot of three arms can be programmed to prepare various types of food quickly and accurately according to the user's preferences. Globally, it is the only robot of its kind to prepare a complete meal without any human intervention, where it selects and prepares ingredients and then cooks and presents the dish to the user. Visitors also enjoyed the smart coffee provided by a robot designed for this purpose.

Commenting on this project, Eng. Majid Al Mazloum, Senior Director of Center of Digital Innovation (CoDI), and member of the TRA Innovation Team, said, "A robot today can make a full meal, read a book, help the visually impaired walk, and provide other services. Today, we are opening the door for Emirati youth to enter the age of AI and contribute to the future of the UAE, placing it in the world's top countries in all fields."

THE CREMA OF CATALANA

With his rich culinary heritage, oodles of talent and charming demeanour, Chef Aleix C Font is easily one of the best exports of Spain to Dubai. The executive chef of Wafi Hospitality traces his journey from the land of tapas and flamenco to the hub of Middle Eastern gastronomy...

ho doesn't like Spain and everything it has to offer? On a casual evening over drinks, nibbling on the small portions that together constitute tapas is a ritual in itself. Top it off with a seafood paella and you have an evening to remember. In between, enjoy a show of flamenco and get ready for a fiesta.

Full of flavours and a distinct taste, every bite of Spanish food comes with an illustrious history. It's a product of wars, conquests and invasions, each of which modified traditions and added new ingredients and flavours to the mix. Any real experience of an albondiga or a croquetta is incomplete without a celebration the cultural heritage of Spain.

It's this rich heritage that is deeply embedded in Chef Aleix C Font. A Catalonian to boot, he is motivated to infuse Spanish ideas and tastes into the gastronomic cauldron of Dubai.

As the executive chef at Wafi Hospitality LLC, in charge of several F&B outlets including Sevilles, Square, Noodle Factory, Biella, Thai Chi, Carters and Asha's, the 38-year-old wields immense power over the menus of these restaurants, which cover a wide range of cuisines from Indian and Spanish to Thai and Chinese. The difference is that he doesn't feel the urge to use this power until necessary, highlighting an attitude of celebrating diversity that comes from his Spanish roots. "It's not my style to tightly control operations," he says in broken English. "All these restaurants have their own executive chefs and they are talented people capable of running the show. My responsibility is to ensure all costs, resources and schedules are optimal." Given that Chef Aleix has 70 chefs under him, this is quite a task.

Being caught in administrative work is a bit of a loss though. Chef Aleix admits that his first love is the kitchen. "I feel like a fish out of water when I don't get to cook. So, I make it a point to go into the different kitchens and stay in touch with cooking."

It's an understandable addiction. Cooking has been and still is a family hobby for the Fonts. "Everyone in my family – from my parents to my grandparents – are great cooks! All of them can put fantastic meals on the table. As a family, we can easily run a restaurant," he laughs. Chef Aleix, however, is the only one who adopted cooking as a profession – his father is a fisherman and his mother is an accountant. And he hasn't regretted it for a second.

It didn't take too long for the young Spaniard to figure out that he wanted to be a professional chef. "I was just 14 when I decided to take this path. There was this famous chef in my hometown and I joined his classes to learn cooking." At 16, he started working in professional kitchens. Along the way, he obtained formal

Everyone in my family – from my parents to my grandparents – are great cooks! All of them can put fantastic meals on the table. As a family, we can easily run a restaurant education in hospitality from the Hoffman School of Hospitality in Barcelona.

The first big responsibility came in 2003, when Chef Aleix was the head chef at Sibar Restaurant in Manresa, a small town in Catalonia. There, he learnt to manage a team and operations. The restaurant was rather popular, with its clientele including players from the Barcelona Football Club.

Over seven years, the young chef learnt all about running a restaurant, skills that came in handy when he decided to set up his own business at the age of 30. "It was called La Xurreria and was in Manresa too. Initially, it was great but the location wasn't the best. We eventually shut it down in a couple of years and I decided to stick to a job from there on."

Returning to Sibar for another year, Chef Aleix couldn't resist when he was presented an opportunity to work with a Michelin-star chef. "His name is Chef Jordi Cruz. The restaurant was called Mon de Sant Benet at Sant Fruitos de Bages. It taught me how high-end fine dining actually works – taste has to be accompanied by visual appeal. I carry that lesson to this day." A couple of years passed by. Exposure to the international set-up made Chef Aleix realise it was time for him to spread his wings. "So I packed my bags and headed out to Bahrain, where I joined La Vinoteca Barcelona as head chef."

Admittedly, the first few months were tough. To begin with, speaking only Spanish was hardly enough to get by. "I had to learn English. Plus, I had to overcome cultural differences. There were chefs from all over the world and the systems were very different from what I was used to. It was a great learning experience for me."

Chef Aleix worked there for just a couple of years, eventually moving to the more cosmopolitan Dubai with a job at Wafi Hospitality in 2015. Initially joining as head chef, he quickly climbed to executive chef in fewer than four years. "I like it here. The management is also very good and I feel I can grow professionally."

Although his work is mostly managerial, Chef Aleix doesn't shy away from popping into kitchens whenever he can. "Going into the kitchens, I can learn different kinds of cuisine. So far, I have managed to pick up some Indian cooking at Asha's, some Thai, Chinese and even African cuisine. We have an African chef at Carters and he's very good."

The creative satisfaction that he misses in his managerial role, Chef Aleix makes up for by cooking for his family at home. "I cook for my wife and daughters as well as for friends when we have a party." However, cooking for himself alone is not inspiring enough. "I take the easy way out. I order from McDonald's," laughs the chef.

As a professional gastronomist, Chef Aleix tries to avoid judging the offerings of other restaurants on his personal visits. "I don't criticise the food to the staff. If I don't like the food at a certain restaurant, I just won't go there again."

Having burnt his fingers with business before, the Spanish chef doesn't envision an own restaurant in his future. "I don't enjoy the whole business of managing payments, sitting in an office and worrying about making profits. With small businesses, that's always the main thing. I would much rather focus on the innovative aspects, which I can in big formats."

For the next few months, he will be busy developing new menus and working on ideas for the next level of growth for the restaurants under him at Wafi. "I am the kind of person who needs freedom to innovate. I have that here."

Although Chef Aleix is proud of his Spanish heritage, he's a big fan of multicuisine concepts. "A little bit of different cuisines on the menu is a lot more fun for the guest. It widens the experience."

Speaking of experiences, does Chef Aleix have any memorable incidents to share from his career? "Just a hugely embarrassing one! Once in the Sevilles restaurant, we had some 95-100 people coming in to eat paella. The door was tricky to navigate and a huge container of paella dropped on the floor, spilling it all over. It was a disaster! People were hungry and waiting for food and there were staff members busy mopping the floor." While more tapas soothed some hunger-ruffled feathers, another round of paella had to be cooked to save the day.

Such incidents, however, pale in significance to the satisfied smiles on the face of guests. "Customer service is the main thing always. A happy guest is a loyal customer."

A service orientation is very important even for those who wants to become chefs. While passion and hard work are the basic ingredients of any successful career, in hospitality, putting guests before self is paramount. "You have to work when everyone else is celebrating. There are no normal vacation days. You won't have enough time for family. There are many sacrifices to be made and you should do this only if you are really passionate about it."

While Chef Aleix misses home sometimes, the big Spanish clientele at Sevilles makes up to some extent for homesickness. "Our Spanish clients are loyal to us. We also try to do the cuisine of different parts of Spain once a month. Spain's national days are also celebrated here."

Some other promotions and ideas are in the offing. Given the location of Wafi's restaurants, they need a little more push than outlets located in the more central areas. "We want to distinguish ourselves from the others. For that, we have to innovate constantly and that is enjoyable."

Stand by for more delicious delights from the house of Wafi.

MIXED DOUBLES

This month's contestants for the Golden Hat Chef Award are Chefs Himanshu Mehra and Santosh Thapa, a talented duo from Lapita, Dubai Parks and Resorts by Marriott International. What gastronomic delights are they offering? Let's find out...

rowing up, they were neighbours. Now, they are a team. This month's Golden Chef Hat Award participants share not only a border and an employer but also a passion for good food. But that's where the similarities end. One loves sweet and the other likes it hot. One is a shy guy, the other is the life of the party.

But together, Chefs Himanshu Mehra and Santosh Thapa pack a powerful punch. Let's know more about them...

Himanshu Mehra

If you watch any Indian soap opera, you would think that large families are characterised by drama. For Chef Himanshu Mehra – who grew up with five uncles, three aunts and their families - a large extended family meant loads of fun and many people to learn from. It was exactly this ecosystem that took him into a career in hospitality. "My father works for IFFCO, which is a fertilisers cooperative and my mother is a housewife," says the 27-year-old chef from Uttarakhand in North India. "So there was no culinary role model in my immediate family. But I had a few cousins who were working in hospitality and they were my inspiration."

Cooking, however, happened by chance. When Chef Himanshu finished school, a relative asked what he wanted to do. 'Hotel management' was the reply but it had little to do with food. "I was fascinated by the idea of travelling and working in big hotels." In fact, he imagined a life working on a cruise ship – lucrative and exciting.

A friend who went to Mumbai to study told Chef Himanshu about a new course – marine hospitality. "I was in high school and I was excited. So I went to Mumbai to get a three-year degree from the College of Maritime Catering and Hospitality."

Cooking still wasn't the first choice. It was only when Chef Himanshu was designated the deputy chef for an event that he saw the possibilities. And liked them.

Campus recruitment followed graduation. Chef Himanshu got a job at a company called Fleet Management, which managed some 250 vessels. As he waited for the travel papers to arrive, he went to Singapore for four months of internship at a Vietnamese restaurant -Nam Nam Noodle Bar. Even though the internship was productive, things went awry when he was finishing up in 2013. "I was offered a job but there were riots there and things didn't quite work out in the mayhem that followed."

Returning to India, he joined the Country Inn & Suites by Carlson in New Delhi as a chef. "The wish to work abroad was still there. So after a year, when I got an opportunity to come to Dubai, I took it." Chef Himanshu's stint here began with Sofitel Downtown Dubai, where he worked for a year and a half.

Due to some familial obligations, he had to head back to India again. "I taught at a hotel management institute close to home for some time and even got married around the time. But then I felt the pull of Dubai and returned in May 2018."

Content with life at the moment, Chef Himanshu wants to focus on learning the fine nuances of cooking at this stage of his career. He's also excited at the opportunity to compete in the Nestle Golden Chef Hat Award – his first ever culinary competition. "I am making a dish inspired by Polynesian cuisine. It's a glazed duck breast served with mintinfused vegetables and carrot pumpkin potato mash drizzled with rhubarb sauce." Chef Himanshu used Nestle's coconut milk powder, potato mash and demiglace for the dish.

By the sheer description, this seems to be a main course worth waiting for.

Santosh Thapa

Unlike Chef Himanshu, small was big for Chef Santosh Thapa. It was a family of four – parents and a brother – but because his parents were mostly away, Chef Santosh learnt to cook from a very young age. "My father works for the Indian army. So he was mostly stationed in India. We lived in Nepal and my mother used to work when I was young, so I had to help with the cooking," recalls the 28-year-old.

In his free time, a young Chef Santosh would watch TV shows where chefs presented their creations. As time passed, it became clearer and clearer where his passion lay. "My brother was working in Dubai at the airport Duty-Free and he encouraged me to consider hospitality as a profession." His mother did not want him to join the army. So when Chef Santosh expressed an interest in a culinary career, she readily agreed.

Getting a three-year diploma in hotel management from a local institute, he was searching for the kitchen most suited to his tastes. "My brother guided me again. He knew a lot of chefs and most said the pastry kitchen was the most exciting." However, that was a gap in Chef Santosh's skill set. So he went to a local institute to learn all about pastry.

October 2019 Gulf Gourmet

With help from his brother, he came to Dubai in June 2012. Arriving on a visitor visa, he secured a job within a week. "I joined the Dubai Le Meridien. It was a good start. My head chef gave me a lot of room to learn." That said, it was tough to adjust to a new environment. Chef Santosh was the only Nepalese member of the team. Even though the team members were supportive, he missed home for the first six months. But then it got better. "I later moved to Shangri La Hotel and Resort in Abu Dhabi and then to Emirates Palace after a year and a half." Emirates Palace was a delightful experience. It was a big property and although work hours sometimes stretched to 15 hours, Chef Santosh enjoyed every minute of it." In January last year, he moved to Marriott International as chef de partie.

Despite having spent six to seven years in the industry, Chef Santosh sees himself as a novice. "I want to learn as much as I can. Someday, I will return to Nepal and train Nepalese chefs."

The Nestle Golden Hat Chef Award is his second culinary competition, SIAL being the first. Excited about the opportunity, he has readied a crispy chocolate mousse dessert with Kitkat, passionfruit panna cotta, orange crème brulee and baked meringue.

Sounds like a perfect finish to a meal. And the right ingredient for a sweet victory.

SUPER MARIO

very year, millions of tourists, both domestic and international, make their way to Goa, the coastal destination in India best known for its hippy-happy culture.

The tiny Indian state is famous all over the world for its pristine beaches, its heavenly delicacies and its vibrant nightlife. But anyone who has visited Goa knows that its biggest asset is its people. With friendly smiles and warm welcome, the Goans strive to give tourists a home away from home. It's not surprising then that many Goans choose hospitality as their occupation after all, making guests happy comes naturally to them.

You can say that Chef Mario Coelho, the executive sous chef at Madinat Jumeirah C&I, is a true-blue Goan. He swears by the power of good food and good service, packaged as a memorable experience. It is indeed a powerful idea, so much so that it has won Chef Mario numerous medals and honours, the latest being the runner-up trophy he won at the Worldchefs Global Chef challenge in South Africa this August, along with Chef Tharindu Lakshan.

And that barely scratches the surface.

He's been a part of the UAE National Team, represented the country in IKA Culinary Olympics and won more than 20 international gold medals.

Quite an impressive career ride! Would you believe it all started with pancake? "Yes, that was the first thing I ever made," says the 40-year-old chef. "My mother was so proud. She said it was perfect!" Chef Mario grew up in Goa with a sister and two brothers, who, incidentally, also ended up in the hospitality industry. "Which is strange because my father worked for an oilfield in Dubai. I guess we were heavily influenced by Goa's hospitality culture."

I have farming in my blood. We have some land back home and my mother tends to it at the moment. I would like to do it someday - grow small things such as tomatoes, mushrooms 1 Sec.

Getting a hotel management degree from a local institute, he spent nearly three years at the marquee Taj Aguada Hermitage before joining a popular nightclub, Tito's, near a famous beach in Goa. "I joined as head chef, responsible for the restaurant. Even though I was barely 23 years old, I had some seven-eight chefs working under me." It was an exciting time. Chef Mario got to design the menu and make improvement to services, something few young chefs get to do.

Then, Dubai happened. But it was no coincidence. His father and both brothers were here and following them to the United Arab Emirates was a natural move. Starting in July 2003, he joined the Jumeirah Wild Wadi Water Park as a commis, quickly graduating to Jumeirah Emirates Tower Hotel's Rib Room steakhouse. "In total, I worked at Jumeirah for about four and a half years. I enjoyed my time at Wild Wadi but it was the Rib Room where my true training happened." One of the biggest learnings was that a professional chef cannot say 'no' to any kind of ingredient. "Right from childhood, I had a strong dislike for beef. To the extent that I would move away with my plate when I saw someone eating it. But at Rib Room, I had to work with it and that was guite a challenge for me."

Years later, when Chef Mario left the Jumeirah group, he had climbed to chef de partie. He joined The Edge fine dining restaurant in Atlantis, the Palm, working there for nearly four years under Chef Juraj Kalna. "Those were some of the best years I had because such concepts rarely exist. Guests would choose their price point and we would decide what they eat based on the freshest ingredients of the day. Some even being flown in from thousands of miles away on a private jet."

At the end of 2010, he joined Wafi Hospitality as sous chef. "I joined the Italian restaurant Medzo. After six months, I was promoted and in the meantime, we won the Timeout 'best restaurant' award."

Chef Mario took care of several restaurants under Wafi Hospitality. Among them were Thai Chi, Biella, Asha's and Square.

In mid-2015, he returned to Jumeirah group as the executive sous chef at Madinat Jumeirah C&I. "There are 30 chefs here doing 100- to 4,000-cover events. It felt like a new experience altogether. These are huge operations." Sometimes, there are large-scale events back-to-back, putting tremendous strain on the staff.

Although the kitchen is centralised, there are five big sections.

You don't know what the next day will bring. And when you participate in competitions, that also takes up a lot of your energy and time

Marth Southo

The team consists of 30 chefs, a rather small count for such large operations. "Our advantage is that this company is a very strong community. Whenever we have a gap, chefs from other hotels are deployed to help us. They are paid extra for working off-duty hours to encourage them to participate." For example, 20 chefs from five other properties were called to help during the World Cup event. "While there are differences between kitchens across the organisation, all our chefs are trained well in basics because we don't use much readymade ingredients. We make things from scratch. That minimises any issues arising from working with temporary colleagues."

Quality matters to Jumeirah. According to Chef Mario, quality comes from attention to detail, especially when cooking in bulk for buffets and events. "Luckily, I have very experienced and skilled chefs. You can depend on them for consistency."

Even with the right team, life is quite hectic. In the distant future, he plans to slow things down by returning home and setting up a farm in Goa. "I have farming in my blood. We have some land back home and my mother tends to it at the moment. I would like to do it someday - grow small things such as tomatoes, mushrooms." A small restaurant to complement the farming business is also a possibility. Chef Mario is clear that he does not want to work for anyone after the age of 55.

That will be a relief for his family too. A chefs tight schedules do not leave much time for much else because in addition to his work, he represents UAE at global culinary competitions and even mentors the junior national culinary team. "I get to work at 7 AM and by the time I get home, it's midnight and my wife and sons are asleep. I see them only on weekends and days off. It's tough!" His wife, Alida, works in human resources in the retail industry. Their older son is seven and

All young chefs know these days is how to open a packet. You may not need to make things from scratch daily but if you don't know how to, then you will always be at the mercy of suppliers.

the younger one is just six months old. "My wife is very understanding – we have been together for nearly 20 years – but the kids don't always get it. The older one gets mad at me when I miss important events. I hope to make it up to them someday."

A stable and supportive family gives Chef Mario the emotional strength needed to survive the challenges of a hospitality career. "You don't know what the next day will bring. And when you participate in competitions, that also takes up a lot of your energy and time." When he went for the Culinary Olympics in Germany, Chef Mario did not sleep adequately for nearly three days!

To be fair, he knew what he was getting into. The hardships of the vocation had made themselves obvious from the day he started in the professional kitchen. "The first day I started at the Taj hotel, I had to clean the chiller in the butchery department. There was so much ice and my feet were frozen by the time I finished. I had to use hot water bottles to warm them." The reality of a life in hospitality hit home. But it was not enough to discourage the determined chef. Today, there is no task that he wouldn't do in his quest to ensure the guest has a great gastronomic experience.

This tenacity and perseverance is somewhat lacking in young chefs these days, rues the Indian chef. "They just try to follow recipes from books instead of learning the basics properly and then innovating with their own ideas." With the onslaught of a range of readymade ingredients, it has definitely become easy. Also, companies now try to cut costs by using readymade material, which is fine as long as the quality doesn't suffer. Unfortunately, knowledge of basics falls by the wayside in the bargain. "All young chefs know these days is how to open a packet. You may not need to make things from scratch daily but if you don't know how to, then you will always be at the mercy of suppliers." Sauces, especially, are important to impart a distinct flavour to dishes.

Chef Mario believes that those seeking quick promotions and big bucks have limited shelf life in the industry. "If you want long-term growth, spend time on getting the basics right."

To bring the right attitudes to the industry, the seasoned chef tries to impart these values to the budding chefs he mentors through his involvement with the Emirates Culinary Guild. He also shares his secret sauce for winning competitions – "Be patient and put your heart in it. Don't just do it for the sake of winning. You should enjoy what you do."

Just like Chef Mario, who enjoys cooking even on personal days. In fact, he waits for weekends not to relax but to cook the traditional Goan curry for his family. "I make it with fish, shrimps or crab. Served with rice, it is the most amazing dish ever. I follow my mother's recipe and it is my comfort zone."

Lucky are those who can find and give comfort in something as simple as food. For the noble cause of soul foods, we need more Chef Marios around.

On The Rise

Lesaffre, the 165-year-old company from northern France, is known for its high-quality yeasts, sourdoughs, bread improvers and premixes. We speak to Stéphan Béague, Global Brand & Marketing Content Manager at Lesaffre International to find out what's new esaffre International has a legacy to protect that is over a one and a half centuries old. So, when they say they have new products to offer, you have no choice but to sit-up and take notice. If you are heading to Gulfood Manufacturing or are reading this at the exhibition, do visit Stand no. S2-C32 in Sheikh Saeed Hall 2 – the Lesaffre team will be presenting Culinary Solutions based on yeast extract and derived ingredients from yeast on display. And much more.

Stéphan Béague, Global Brand & Marketing Content Manager at Lesaffre International tells us what the industry can expect from them and how they are constantly innovating to support its partners in their quest to keep up with changing consumer behavior. Be it shelf life or healthier alternatives.

Here are excerpts from the conversation:

Can you please tell us about Lesaffre and its history?

As a key global player in yeasts and fermentation, Lesaffre designs, manufactures and markets innovative solutions for Baking, Food taste & pleasure, Health care and Biotechnology.

It is a family group born in northern France in 1853, now a multi-local and a multi-cultural company, Lesaffre is committed to working with confidence to better nourish and protect the planet.

For more than 165 years and throughout the world, Lesaffre provides innovative and functional bread making solutions.

The baking activity is oxrganized into four businesses.

- Yeasts
- Sourdoughs
- Bread improvers
- Premixes

Its businesses carry global brand names (Livendo, Magimix, Saf-Instant and l'Hirondelle).

In close collaboration with its clients and partners, Lesaffre employs 10,500 people in 80 subsidiaries based in more than 50 countries. Lesaffre achieves a turnover of 2 billion euros.

How long have you been in the Middle East and Gulf region?

Lesaffre has been commercializing its products in the Middle East and Gulf region for several years now and the local presence with production sites and sales offices go as far back as 1991.

Have you noticed any changes within the industry in recent years? One of the main trends in the market is to extend shelf-life of bread to decrease level of bread wastage. As you know, on market, toast and hamburger breads have longer shelf-life than other bread types. This is one of the main reasons why the demand is growing. Also, this kind of bread types are mainly consumed by fast-food chains and this is also another reason for higher demand of these breads.

We also observe an increasing demand for healthy bread that has sodium, sugar and fat replacer ingredients, due to the changing consumer behaviors on direction of healthier foods. Less sugar or fat content and lower sodium level are getting more important because of that consumption behaviour.

We follow these trends and work on alternative solutions to respond to the needs of the market. For example, our sourdough products help the producer to decrease sugar or salt level in their bread without any change to the taste. Using natural ingredients in sourdough is also helping to replace salt and sugar in bread.

Are there any major challenges you face in this market?

For industrial producers, cost optimization is one of the key points that is becoming more and more important lately. In order to be more flexible in terms of variety of products supplied and and to be able to deliver to long distances, industrial bakers need to invest on the processes where the final or semi-final product can be stored longer. This might be possible by adding preservatives on the fresh packed products and or by investing on the frozen dough technics.

Products prepared with frozen dough technics can be stored for longer periods, and thus be delivered to longer distances compared to fresh packed products that include preservatives. This is very important in terms of supply and logistics costs and ensures flexibility on the product range availability when delivering to long distances. To respond to these kind of needs of our industrial customers and to support them with the challenges they are facing in their business, we offer them products and solutions with frozen dough techniques.

What is new from Lesaffre at Gulfood Manufacturing 2019?

This year, Lesaffre (Yeast and Baking Solutions) will be participating the Gulfood Manufacturing 2019 with its sister company, Biospringer by Lesaffre specialized in Culinary Solutions based on yeast extract and derived ingredients from yeast at Stand no. S2-C32 in Sheikh Saeed Hall 2.

Lesaffre will be presenting the new image of its well-known brand Safinstant, which is the favorite yeast of professional bakers since 1973. We will demonstrate the new application developed specially to respond to the bakers needs and provide them inspiring recipes and update them with the latest trends in baking business. Lesaffre will also be presenting its latest sourdough solution launched in the UAE market: Livendo 2i1n Rustic Sourdough as well as the new Inventis Sensation.

The Degustation Corner hosted by the experts from the Baking Center™ (Lesaffre) and Culinary Center (Biospringer) will present recipes prepared with Saf-instant yeast, Livendo 2in1 Rustic Sourdough, Inventis Sensation with Seeds Crackers taste and Semolina Crackers taste, Springer® Mask 101, as well as common recipes prepared with Lesaffre yeast and sourdough products and Biospringer yeast extracts, which create a fusion of intense and exclusive taste. There will be a degustation activity in our stand, where the experts will be explaining the sensorial analysis of those special recipes.

What are the newest developments at Lesaffre?

Always at their fingertips, the Safinstant mobile app offers bakers access to numerous services and useful content: technical advice and business tips, tutorials, videos and amazing recipes. The Saf-instant mobile app can be downloaded in just a click from the website at saf-instant.com or directly on Google Play and the App store.

To make the baker's life easier, by offering them the finest yeasts and the best adapted services, Lesaffre is globally launching the new image and communication of its iconic brand, Safinstant, with a new goal: "Let's make it happen!"

Biospringer will be presenting its new product, Springer® Mask 101, an innovation of natural origin and veganfriendly, which allows manufacturers to improve nutritional profile without compromising on taste.

What makes Lesaffre stand out as a brand?

Apart from its right legacy and history, what sets us apart is that we work hand-in-hand with baking professionals to cater to new market needs with the aid of our R&D policy and technical support of our worldwide Baking Center™ network.

Lesaffre's network of 46 Baking Center™, with more than 300 experts all over the world speaking 60 languages, Lesaffre has the unique ability to offer its customers the chance to discover and innovate.

We say that there is always something 'on the rise' at Lesaffre!

Culinaire Malaysia

The 15th edition of the Malaysian premier trade-only food and hospitality show, Food & Hotel Malaysia (FHM) was held last month. The event was also the platform for the professional cooking challenge called Culinaire Malaysia. Our very own Chairman Andy Cuthbert was at the event that saw an assemblage of more than 1,000 culinary professionals, displaying their skills and talent in all contesting disciplines and categories. Here are images from the event.

R.I.P. Michael Wunsch

rom taste tantaliser to solutions provider, Chef Michael Wunsch contributed to the culinary industry from many vantage points. He even had the vote of thanks from the environment. The former managing director of fruit juices and precut vegetables company Barakat Quality Plus had business acumen, creativity and humanity rolled into one affable persona.

In our cover story featuring him back in April 2016, we had mentioned that while most chefs would love to someday become an Executive Chef, we think, executive chefs wished they would someday be like Michael Wunsch or Chef Mike as he's fondly known.

Chef Mike had been there and done that. He was a founding member of the Emirates Culinary Guild and his support of the culinary industry is known to all.

When we met him three years ago, Chef Mike had only recently lost his mother aged 91, and had also recently married.

The BMW sports bike riding member of the bowling team Barakat Blasters, was just bordering 60 when he passed away but his life was that of a 20-something. If he was not bowling he was driving into the dessert.

Mike Wunsch had a life worthy of a novel, but his success has been a direct result of his ability to understand the opportunities available and to act on them sensibly.

We will forever remember Chef Mike for being a great supporter of the chef community especially in the UAE. Our thoughts and prayers are with his family. Here are some moments captured at his funeral mass held at St. Mary's Church in Dubai.

HOW TO CREATE A DIGITAL PRESENCE

"90% trust peers on social networks (even strangers); only 15–18% trust brands." — Danny Brown, Award-Winning Marketer and Author t is evident and becoming increasingly crucial for individuals to develop their digital presence. This is more than just your website and social media profiles. People and companies are watching your online behaviour (personal and work) to get a bigger picture of your whole life.

Digital presence is about:

- 1. Creating a professional brand
- 2. Finding the right people
- 3. Engaging with insights
- 4. Building and developing strong relationships

It is about building, developing and nurturing relationships online for others to see, feel and hear who you truly are. For this you need three things:

 Authenticity. This means you have passion plus are mature enough to take in feed forward. Without the maturity you are simply a narcissist and unauthentic.

Authenticity, honesty, and personal voice underlie much of what's successful on the Web — Rick Levine, Author of

The Cluetrain Manifesto

- Persuasion. This is about influencing someone to do something or to change his or her mind.
- Pre-suasion. Psychologist Robert Cialdini defines this as "the practice of getting people sympathetic to your message before they experience it."

To achieve the above, create curiosity by making it personal and relevant. You simply need to:

- Inform let your audience know of insights about your industry and work, it is not about self promotion
- Influence provide insights to your audience that kindles the flame to serve others
- Inspire communicate in a genuine manner for your followers to take action with spirit

The goal is to be an A.C.E.

- A -AUTHORITY Be the leader in your arena. Involves providing value & evergreen content, and sharing regularly.
- C CONNECT First, connect with relevant people. Second, engage them via likes, comments & shares.
- E ENGAGE Mix of text posts, images, sharing & writing articles, videos. Remember to develop offline rapport.

It takes time to get to all of the above right. It is a journey, and on this journey you need to remember six essentials:

- Update Profile Includes headline, summary, job descriptions, and accomplishments, profile banner.
- Resources Research relevant resources such as wins, news, online articles, videos, images, thoughts to be shared.
- 3. Regular Posting Ensure you are posting on a regular basis. Will that be one, twice or three times a day, week or month.
- 4. Powerful Connections Get & focus on relevant connects. Engage with likes, comments, share their connect and email them.
- 5. Review Ways Ensure to review your statistics of engagement. Check on how to improve engagement, shares and connect offline.
- Unique Content A combination of articles, images, videos, text that is unique to you are posted (not just copy and paste from others).

When using any digital platform for your digital presence remember to ask these important questions:

- Why are we using the digital platform?
- What are your goals for this digital platform?
- Are your target markets using it?
